

PROPHETS VERSUS THOSE WHO PROPHECY

Seersgate gives her wisdom:

A prophet is in a literal governmental office that stems from a calling and impartation from King Jesus Himself. Yahweh brings a prophet into the natural way, and no one can pray and hope they become a prophet by the laying on of human hands. Yahweh calls a prophet into service with spiritual stripping and spiritual upgrades to carry the weight of the assignments. No prophet loses their free will and becomes a robot in Yahweh's service. Each day, a servant must actively choose to walk in the Spirit and submit to Kingdom order through the power of the Great Holy Spirit. The training of the prophet is challenging. Many are not able to understand the novice training way. Yet, there is a safety net when dealing with church structure, how young prophets should get mentorship through seasoned prophets. The problem with a majority of prophets is that their training stems from pastoral and other office structures. The prophets of today tend to exhort and encourage and teach and depend on the people to tell them if they hear Yahweh speak.

What needs to begin with the prophets? There needs to be a gauge by seasoned prophets that would govern young prophets and their training, not usurp Yahweh's plan. The seasoned prophet should look at where the young prophet stands to see if they are active and released for service before throwing them on stage. Here is what happens in a majority of cases: a house leader has a heads up that a person is going to be used by God, but instead of them waiting on Yahweh to see where that person is in their training, that leader puts them on the platform and gives them a natural license to speak, but Yahweh hasn't finished preparing them for service. The novice may even go to seminary or attend in-house training to lead, yet Yahweh hasn't given the covenant for provision, protection, and power. And so, this flesh-filled novice with no spiritual breaking, lacking in real Kingdom power, is pushed to the front, expected to operate as a licensed officer in the court of Yahweh. A dangerous plan, yet I have watched it happen over and over with those in the public eye. And then they take the prophet under their counsel, spank them on the hand and say, “Now, don’t sin anymore. Did you learn your lesson? Did you repent? Now, go back up there and minister,” not seeing that they are setting that novice up for failure all over again.

I can recount a time where I told someone that I was sure I was ready for service. And the leader told me that I wasn’t. I disagreed with her, and it was a good plan that she did not listen to my way. I had not entered my Cave training, nor was I aware that there was one. I had gotten encouraging words from others, telling me that God would use me and that I would be this and that. I had so many spiritual treats from Yahweh, and I could not imagine life being any better. That was around twenty years ago. I was in the wooing stage with Yahweh. He wanted to get my attention and awaken my spirit to the unseen realm, to how the ways of the spirit realm operated.

I was so wrong to assume I was ready without dealing with my flesh and have spiritual stripping with Yahweh. Many lonely nights, I was crying out to Yahweh to understand the process of breaking under His mighty hand. What if someone pushed me on stage twenty years ago and said, “Now, operate as a prophet. You are called that. Go for it!” No matter how much human support I would have taken in would have prepared me for the spiritual warfare of walking in an office with no spiritual backing.

Here is what is going on in the church outlets: Weekend activation classes tell the regular church member, “Hey! Stop by. Pay this minimal fee, and you too can prophesy. Yay!” And here are the people, hungry for any form of spiritual engagement, tired of hearing about their friend having a touch from God, and they did not. So, now they go there with anticipation with the name they recognize, thinking that because they have heard of that person, maybe there is something they can get from them.

They say to themselves, “If that well-known person prays, maybe I can get it, whatever anointing they have.”

Then in the “activation” service, the guest speaker tells everyone to pray this prayer, gather in groups, and start saying whatever comes to mind. What a dangerous practice!!! I’ve seen this happen. I have attended more than one of those plans in my life at church outlets. And some are genuinely longing for more of God, more of His presence, thinking that if God talks to the speaker that way, surely, He will do the same with them. But understand me, God does not speak to all in the Kingdom as if they are prophets, and even those in the office gift may hear Yahweh say His will through other forms of communication, such as visions and dreams. Yahweh's written Word gives a firm foundation as to what Yahweh's will is, and at the same time, it was the Great Way's Spirit that called you into the Kingdom by the hearing of the Word of God.

The Great Holy Spirit brings all who seek Yahweh's plan of salvation into the body of Christ. So, there may not be a whisper that you hear, but know that God the Great Holy Spirit still guides you and will bring peace through King Jesus in your daily living. And prophets must wait upon Yahweh for a message, not say what sounds good. To be a prophet takes more than having a title, and they must only share what the Great Holy Spirit gives. To operate in the gifts of the Great Holy Spirit can come upon any Christian, and a prophet is not needed in that regard. The gifts of the Spirit flow through Kingdom citizens to use as God gives them, and no one can learn these gifts.

The servant prophet outlet carries licenses that the lay member or other office gifts will not have. And telling the crowd to prophesy, calling them prophets, is a dangerous plan. It is wrong to draw the crowds in, making them think they have governing authority in an office gift when there is no spiritual backing. Yahweh's people must take their assigned place in the body of Christ and not take on coveting the prophet's way. If they realize that as a believer, there is great power by praying what Yahweh says, healing and deliverance will come based on Yahweh's plan.

Embrace the plan of prayer and supplication. Request the ear of Yahweh, not attempt to command Him to do what you want. Not by declaring a Scripture out of context will Yahweh submit. The Creator of the universe can turn the heart of a king however way He wants, and with that power, how can a mere mortal think that there can be a barking of orders to Yahweh, saying that they are seated with Him and have judging rights in Heaven to make Yahweh bend?
